Index of Consumer Sentiment

Source: University of Michigan, Survey Research Center

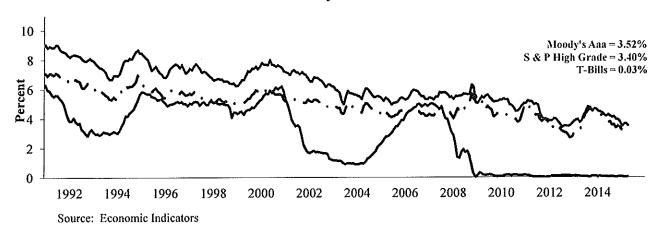

The Index of Consumer Sentiment increased in April to 95.9 index-points, 2.9 index-points above the March value and 11.8 index-points above April 2014. On the increase in confidence, Survey Director Richard Curtin noted, "Consumer confidence remained unchanged in late April at its second highest level since 2007. The data provide no indication of falling confidence; indeed, the Sentiment Index has recorded a higher average level during the last five months than anytime since May 2004. The very small changes recorded in late April involved slightly less favorable assessments of current economic conditions and slightly more favorable expectations for future economic conditions. Overall, however unwillingly, consumers have adjusted to a new era of slow economic growth accompanied by low inflation and low interest rates." Curtin observed, "Although recent gains in jobs and incomes have prompted the most favorable personal financial expectations in eight years, consumers' assessments of their financial situation are still far below the peaks recorded in earlier decades. Consumer optimism has become increasingly dependent on the persistence of low inflation and low interest rates as well as slowly improving prospects for jobs and incomes." On buying attitudes, Curtin reported, "Vehicle buying conditions remained quite positive largely due to favorable references to interest rates as well as low gas prices (which will tilt sales more toward larger, less fuel efficient vehicles)." In April, consumers in all four regions reported an increase in confidence.
